New town office considered

BY JOSH SKAPIN
Didsbury Review

The Town of Didsbury is reviewing its options for a new municipal building, and location.

According to the town, a call for interest and proposals from companies on concept work will be distributed to Calgary and Edmonton newspapers later this week.

Presently, the town is considering property that was purchased from Chinook's Edge School Division, formerly the home of the old Didsbury High School.

Mayor Brian Wittal says the town is looking at the property to incorporate a new town office, seniors' housing complex, and central park area.

If the move is made, Wittal says a decision has not been made for what will happen to the present building.

However, Wittal believes the town building is in a prime commercial location, and would be a positive spot for a new business.

"We are also currently looking at the town's future needs for facilities and are working with a consultant doing a needs assessment as to what size of a Town office and fire hall we are going to need," said Wittal.

The town is in the process of completing an appraisal on all municipally owned properties as part of a Tangible Capital Asset Accounting process that all municipalities are now involved in.

"We need to know the current value of all of our assets that the Town has from buildings to vehicles to roads and sidewalks and pipes underground," said Wittal.

"We need to start planning for the future and these are the first steps that will help council decide what it is we will do and or build on the old High School property."

ment done on all of our facilities it gives us a better idea of what we have and the value of those properties. This will help us to plan for the future as far as replacing facilities and or sale of properties, whichever way council may decide to go in the future."

While the town is presently eyeing a new municipal office specifically, Wittal says the library and fire hall will be reviewed at a later date.

Wittal believes, when it comes time for the library to find a new home, that the high-traffic Didsbury Memorial Complex would be a positive change.

Volunteers, community secure Rugby Hall future

MARK LAYCOCK
Didsbury Review

The future of Rugby Hall has been secured thanks to an outpouring of support from 29 volunteers, as well as a hefty grant from the provincial government.

The hall received a cheque worth $31,858, presented by MLA Richard Marz last Monday from the Alberta Lottery Fund Community Enhancement Project, which will be put towards other repairs needed to keep the hall functioning.

The hall, located northwest of Didsbury, has been in desperate need of repairs since last year's devastating hailstorm caused extensive damage to the hall's roof resulting in subsequent flooding, electrical, sewer and foundation problems costing upwards of $50,000.

On July 19, individuals from the Elkton Valley Campground and Rugby community worked together to fashion a new tin roof on the hall.

Didsbury's Della Kyncl, president of the Rugby Recreation Society, said the campers felt inclined to give back to the hall after it became pivotal in providing support during a flood in 2005 that forced campers out of the campground.

The hall housed a silent auction fundraiser and luncheon for the campers. Additionally, members of Rugby volunteered their time to clean up the campground.

"I think it's wonderful," said Kyncl. "I grew up in that small community and community (support) and camaraderie has always been very important to me and I felt it was displayed very well over the weekend."

Volunteers worked for 10 hours, managing to secure the roof in just one day. A grant from the county and funds raised from area companies including the AltaGas Processing Plant, Trans Canada Pipeline, and the Dave Bricker Family and locals were enough to purchase the tin; additional supplies were provided from Darcey Coleman and Dave Hughes.

"Because the folks volunteered all their time, instead of being $15,000 (for a new roof) it was closer to $5,000, so it just seemed to work out very well for us and we took advantage of that and the roof's done..."

The roof served as the make it or break it factor in the hall's future. In April, Kyncl noted that if the roof wasn't repaired, and soon, the hall would have to be closed.

Looking at the hall now, Kyncl said it's a wonderful sight to see how much progress has been made.

"It looks shiny," she said jokingly.

Fire at Harmattan

Blaze starts from gas-fired heater

BY JOSH SKAPIN
Didsbury Review

The Didsbury volunteer fire department responded to a blaze at the Altagas Harmattan complex, located seven kilometres west of Didsbury last Thursday.

According to a prepared statement from Altagas, the fire occurred in a natural gas-fired oil heater and was contained to the heater, at approximately 10:15 p.m.

Area resident Brittany Stausser witnessed the fire.

"It was something I had never seen before," said Stausser.

"There was a lot of black smoke and an absolutely massive flare on one of their stacks.

There was a lot of fire on the ground at the east end."

The Didsbury volunteer fire department was on scene for approximately four hours, according to safety officer Pat Dodman.

"We were there for quite a long time," said Dodman, who said the firefighters spent much of the time cooling the tower.

"We had to wait for all the fuel to burn up first, to make sure none of the exposures burnt up."

Dodman said there are challenges a fire department faces when addressing a fire at a gas plant.

BRITTANY STAUSSER "The other gas in the plant, flammable (materials) like, and poisonous gas were quite a concern to us," he said, adding that all members of the fire department experience specific training for such situations.

"But we worked closely with the gas plant. They are the experts out there."

According to Altagas, Area residents, Alberta Environment, the Energy Resources Conservation Board and customers have been notified.

Presently, AltaGas staff are on site and assessing damage to the complex.

At press time, no further details have been released.

"It was something I had never seen before."

West Nile virus

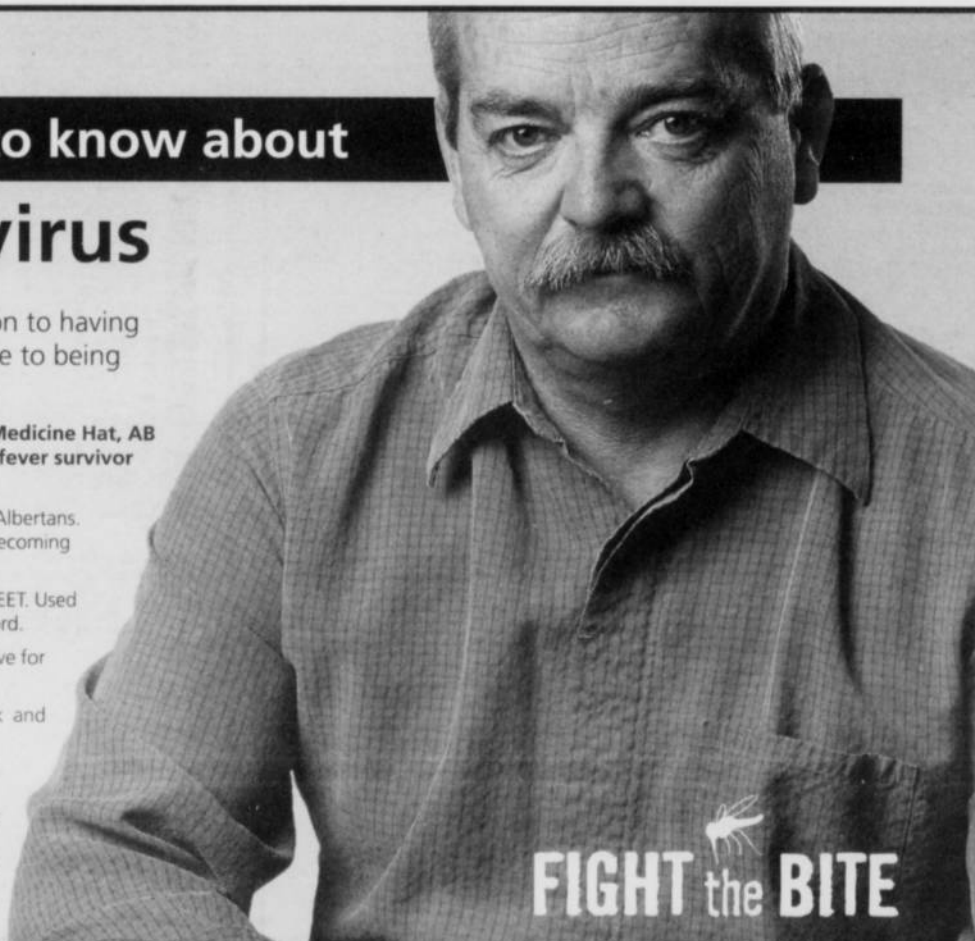

"I went from training for a marathon to having a three and a half month headache to being off work for almost a year."

— Graham, Medicine Hat, AB
West Nile fever survivor

West Nile virus remains a health concern for all Albertans. Those over the age of 50 are at greater risk of becoming seriously ill when infected with West Nile virus.

- Your best protection is insect repellent with DEET. Used as directed, DEET has an excellent safety record.
- Products with lemon eucalyptus oil are effective for shorter periods of time.
- Wear long-sleeved shirts and pants at dusk and dawn when mosquitoes are most active.

Provincial drinking restriction

The editors of the Carstairs Courier and Didsbury Review lock horns in a monthly debate

For

MARK LAYCOCK

Starting next month, Alberta bar-goers looking for a cool drink on a warm summer's evening will have to abide by alcohol regulations as outlined by the Alberta Government.

The new rules state that drinking establishments are no longer allowed to implement drink specials after 8 p.m., minimum drink prices will be in place, and patrons will not be able to have more than two drinks at a time after 1 a.m.

The province says the regulations are designed to curb bar violence and limit the consumption of individuals who like to occasionally sleep at the foot of their toilet.

While the province has its heart in the right place, the last time I checked it wasn't illegal for a person to get drunk, or drink excessively in a short amount of time.

However, by no means am I condoning the act itself. Although it's a person's right to drink themselves under the table, it's certainly not a requirement or of any benefit to a person.

There's a reason why most bars have one or two large men in black clothing who stand by the door on a Friday and Saturday night—to take out the trash.

I see no reason why bars can't police themselves. Most establishments have policies in place as is: no fighting, no excessive rowdy behaviour, and if your lunch appears on the floor it's time to leave.

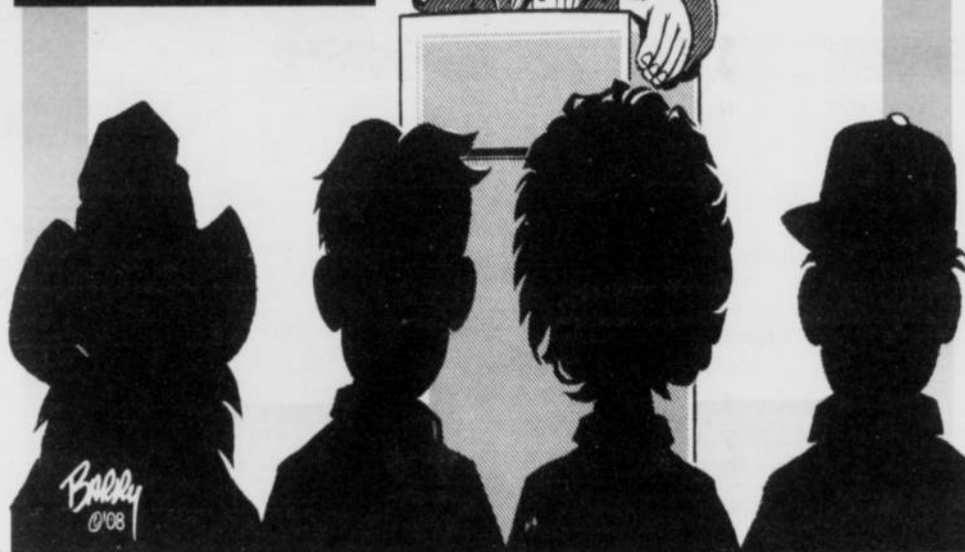

What this legislation is forgetting is that there needs to be some accountability on the shoulders of patrons themselves. Why should the establishment be punished for the actions of its guests?

In college, I was witness to numerous instances of unruly behaviour at drinking establishments, with each happening disbanded swiftly by a visit from the local police or a large scary bouncer who should consider lying off the steroids for a while. In each instance, I can't think of any way in which these restrictions would have prevented or mediated the situation.

The province seems to think that eliminating drink specials, and the number of drinks served after 1 a.m., will discourage patrons from downing a few too many too fast, however most binge drinkers will circumvent that problem by hitting the local liquor store and having a few at home before heading out.

The safety of bar staff, and especially servers is always something that should be under the vigilant eye of owners; they are the ones who see these acts first hand, and can act on them at the same time. But there is no reason to think a few government regulations will prove effective except to further limit the rights of Albertans.

LEADERS VENT THEIR FRUSTRATIONS AS THEY GROPE FOR WAYS TO MAINTAIN LOCAL INFRASTRUCTURES...

Sutherland Band support appreciated

I (would like to) express my great appreciation of the very warm welcome given by the citizens of Carstairs to the Sutherland Schools Pipe Band when they played in the town on July 6.

Members of the band are pupils of Golspie High School and Dornoch Academy secondary schools, and their feeder primary schools in villages throughout east and central Sutherland. These include Brora and Lairg Primaries. Hugh Sutherland, my mother's cousin, who gave his name to the school in Carstairs, was born in Brora, Sutherland, emigrating to Canada as a young boy with his parents Robert and Margaret Sutherland.

When I heard that the Pipe Band was to be competing at the Calgary Stampede I thought it would be wonderful if they could play at Carstairs in recognition of that link. I feel very proud that they were able to do so and I should like to thank all those who helped with the arrangements for their visit, providing transport and excellent hospitality, coming to see and hear them, and expressing to these young people their welcome and enjoyment.

My relatives, Harold and Val Leslie, of Didsbury played a very big part in bringing the band to Carstairs. I am very grateful to them. Many, many thanks to everyone involved.

Rev. Leslie Goskirk,

Against

JOSH SKAPIN

To every police officer I've spent any time interviewing, I have asked the same question: what's the hardest part of your job?

Without hesitation, the answer is always identical.

It's the feeling they have when they walk up to the door, and the hellish experience informing a mother, father, husband, or wife, that their loved one has passed away in a collision caused by drinking and driving.

It's hard to argue with the newly implemented restrictions on alcohol service at licensed establishments.

Just for a second, think about your experience in bars and what time of the night you're most likely to see someone inebriated out of their mind.

Many would agree, it's a short while after 1 a.m., that the tipsy turn to tanked.

Eliminate that extra layer of intoxication. Make the people who are planning on bottom's-up until they hit the floor, head home.

This will lead to reducing the risk of one of the truly hammered slipping behind the wheel of their swerving pickup truck.

In addition to that, it will eliminate these people from souring your enjoyable evening on the town.

Keep in mind, I'm not frowning on drunkenness – I'm just fond of people getting fueled up and then hitting an extra three or four drinks to top things off.

Those are the people that tend to be ants at a picnic.

Picture this: I'm at a bar and look towards the stage where the band is performing. The live music is just past the head of a man and his girlfriend, seated at a nearby table.

Due to the fellow's blurred interpretation, he is led to believe that I am eyeballing his female companion.

With the sleeves on his t-shirt rolled up to showcase a devotion to dumbbells, offensive language wasn't just tossed around, but so was I.

I'm just speculating, but something tells me that if he stopped emptying pints at 1 a.m., instead of guzzling like he hadn't seen a beverage in weeks, such a misunderstanding wouldn't have occurred.

Restrictions on drinking may be a downer for some to start, but like everything – including the smoking changes, people get used to them, and the positives will outweigh the negatives.

Three men rob Mac's at gunpoint

BY MARK LAYCOCK
Didsbury Review

Police are still looking for three men who held up the Carstairs Mac's Esso store in the early hours of the morning last Wednesday.

Shortly before 3 a.m., three unidentified males wearing hoodies and masks entered the store, with one individual armed with a shotgun.

The three men proceeded to ask the clerk for cash and cigarettes.

The individuals promptly left the building, leaving with an undisclosed amount of cash and cigarettes.

Didsbury RCMP Const. Robert Kavanaugh said the robbers were in the store for no longer than four minutes.

The robbers then fled the scene, but there is no indication they had a vehicle or any other mode of transportation.

The suspects are described as three males in their early 20s, with two ranging from five feet eight inches to five feet 11 inches tall, and the other, "a little bigger" at approximately six feet tall.

RCMP was on scene within three to four minutes of the call, but found no suspects upon arrival.

"When we got there the employee had already locked down the store," said Kavanaugh.

He described the clerk as shaken up, but noticeably disturbed by the incident. "He was visually disturbed; it would have affected him."

RCMP Police Dog Service from Red Deer was also called in.

Although multiple suspects committed the crime, Kavanaugh said this particular incident isn't unusual.

"It depends on what their motive was."

"Obviously each person would have played a role in it in some means."

Anthony's work hangs in Inuvik

BY JOSH SKAPIN
Didsbury Review

Didsbury stained glass artist, Bill Anthony, received a phone call from Bill Davidson, owner and manager of Larga Homes in Edmonton, shortly after Mother's Day of this year.

Davidson wanted to leave something memorable from Larga Homes to the Inuvik Regional Hospital, where many of the people he assisted were being treated.

Anthony was approached about the project and asked if he could complete it in five weeks.

"Pretty much everything else was put aside," said Anthony, of the six foot by three foot window.

The piece was transported by truck and installed at the hospital chapel window, followed by a dedication ceremony July 21.

Anthony started with simple drawings, and then discussed colours.

"I looked at a lot of different drawings and pictures of church windows," said Anthony, who, with Davidson's guidance opted for a prominent cross, with radiating lines.

"I wasn't sure what I was going to do with the cross. Even after Bill left, I still wasn't sure. But I tried all kinds of different glass, but it just didn't look right. It looked weak."

So Anthony recalled crosses in church windows that he remembered seeing and appreciating.

"Many times they're brightly-coloured wood, and really powerful, and I wanted to capture that," he explained.

"So I took a technique that I had been experimenting with for the past three or four months."

He took regular window glass and wrapped it in metal foil, and soldered it layer after layer, giving it texture and depth.

Anthony says he feels a sense of pride from his work now on display and used as a gift to the hospital.

"It's a passion," he said, adding that the process of stained glass can be delayed gratification. "The first time we saw this, it was beautiful...they were very happy with it."

Fireworks: Behinds the scenes

MARK LAYCOCK
Didsbury Review

It's 8 p.m. on a quiet Friday night. Hunched over a rack of fireworks in an empty field north of the Carstairs subdivision is Shaune Plumb. The waist-high yellow grass sways with a gentle bend as the faint sound of cheering can be heard from the Carstairs Rodeo.

Dressed in a yellow fire retardant jumpsuit and situated in the centre of the field, Plumb uses a knife to nick a small hole in the fuse of each firework in order to run a time delay fuse between each. It's a meticulous process; one by one he has to nick every single firework—fortunately he has had four hours to do it.

But he's not alone, his helpers, Shawn Coates and Shawn Osborne (the "Shawn Show" they jokingly call themselves) are there to assist.

Over the course of four hours the three Shawns will rig 200 pounds of explosives—some ranging from the size of a golf ball to about the size of a softball—worth up to $3,500, with a total shell count of 150.

"These are big fireworks," says Plumb while holding a large six-inch shell with an even larger smile on his face.

Spectators will certainly know when they're set off he says.

As the sun fades into the horizon with a dark blue bleed stretching westward, the town of Carstairs begins to light up with a yellow glow. The three Shawns, all of who are members of the Carstairs Volunteer Fire Department, work feverishly to prepare several racks of fireworks before the show.

Racks are stands that each firework will sit in. Each firework is placed into a tube called a mortar with a long fuse that leads from the very bottom all the way to the top.

Each mortar is designed for a specific size of firework. Sizes can range from a two inch to a six inch and even larger.

For the Carstairs Rodeo fireworks display, a six-inch shell (firework) is the largest that can be used.

"It's getting harder and harder in Carstairs to shoot them because (the large fireworks) go so high; we need such a large fallout zone."

As Plumb sits over an orange coloured rack nicking fuses, Coates and Osborne tape up some rather large Roman candles to a uniquely shaped rack known as a fan. The fireworks are taped to the metal rack with one facing straight up, two to the side shooting at a 70 degree angle, and two more to the sides shooting about a 50 degree angle.

Coates says his first experience with fireworks began while on vacation. After stopping at a gas station he decided to buy some consumer level Roman candles. After firing them off, well, the rest is history.

Plumb became involved with fireworks in 2000 when the primary fireworks lighter at the department left, so the Ag. Society was looking for another qualified individual to do the job.

fireworks co-ordinator

He accepted the responsibility and enrolled in a course, later receiving a level one licence allowing him to shoot off fireworks.

As the three continue nicking fuses, Plumb becomes increasingly irritated with the direction and speed of the northerly wind.

A fallout area distancing several hundred metres is required to protect spectators from the launch site, however a strong wind can make the launch rather troublesome.

As a result, the three will have to angle the fireworks much steeper towards the direction of the wind.

"You have to gauge everything on where your mortars are going to go. You got to launch them and you want them to follow the right area," says Plumb.

Fireworks can be launched in wind, rain and snow, but not thunderstorms.

"If it's a lightning storm in our vicinity you can't do it because there's a particle trail (left as the firework ascends) that an electrical storm can pick up on and could send an electrical charge back down that trail and potentially, if you're using electronic flaring, it'll shoot everything off. If you're hand lighting, like we do, it'll probably hit us and that'll be bad."

A firework, essentially, is a rather simple and basic thing to use he says.

Each firework has a charge on the bottom of it. Above it is different chemicals that when lit, produce different colours and shapes.

As the firework shoots out of the mortar it "flips and flops" until it hits its designated altitude and explodes.

Professional level fireworks, such as the ones used in the show, can range from $10 for a small one, to $200 or more for a large one. The louder and more complicated the firework, the more expensive it is; a primary reason why fireworks that explode and use a design aren't used.

Well, that, and it's all related to chance.

As the firework flings to the sky, it tosses and tumbles. If it doesn't explode in the right direction, then spectators won't see anything but a line in the sky.

"It's all direction, so what they say to do is if you want a smiley face in the sky, you're supposed to light four or five of them and the odds are that everybody is going to get a good view. But at $100, $250 a pop, it really doesn't fit in the budget."

Budget constraints are the main reason for small displays, particularly at small community events.

The Canada Day fireworks display cost approximately $1,000, meaning this display is about three times larger. Professional displays such as the Calgary Stampede fireworks show can cost upwards of $100,000 or more.

Once the nicking is completed and a fuse is run between the shells, the three men will take an ordinary road flare and light each rack.

The industry standard is usually to have a firework in the sky every second, but for smaller events, coordinators aim for every three to four seconds to make the experience longer.

When lighting, dubbed "hand lighting"—as opposed to electronic lighting, which involves electronic fuses attached to a computer—members dress in fire retardant gear, complete with goggles, hearing protection and a helmet.

As each firework is lit, Plumb says he can feel the concussion wave of the ascending firework.

"You're going to get the (loud sound) in the sky, but we get (it louder) and... a concussion," says Plumb.

"They're pretty good at what they do."

Depending on the size of the firework, this show will see them fire up to 30 or 45 metres.

Store bought fireworks will fire upwards of six to 12 metres.

After each firework explodes, debris will rain down onto the launch area as a cloud of smoke drifts with the wind.

Plumb says the parts that remain after a display will be paper and a little plastic, but he notes some sparks can fall from the sky, which is why displays always have fire response nearby.

Plumb says the attraction to fireworks is as simple as the attraction to lighting a campfire — it's tons of fun.

Coates elaborated, "Living life on the edge."

Maintaining Gary's dream

Deb Buck's battle to keep Hall local

BY JOSH SKAPIN
Didsbury Review

Gary Buck always had an appreciation for items of sentimental significance.

Some may say, it all started when he kept a ticket from his first visit to the Grand Ole Opry with his parents, when he was small.

"He kept everything," said Didsbury's Deb Buck, of her late husband's collection of memorabilia, that later grew into the Canadian Country Music Hall of Fame. "He's wanted to do this forever."

Today, the status of the Hall of Fame, specifically its location, is somewhat in question.

The hall includes artifacts that include instruments, album covers, and clothing, among others.

"Generations need to know where this all came from, and who started things."

DEB BUCK

This year, plaques, owned by a separate organization that honour hall members were moved to a museum in Merritt, B.C.

She admits the economic aspect of keeping a hall of fame, or any museum-esque collection open for the enjoyment of the public, to be a daunting task.

While Deb says the Hall of Fame owes a lot of its success to the commitment of volunteers, many of whom, have stuck to the project since its inception in 1999, the price tag on insurance and security for the building is still a challenge.

Her aim and optimism centres around, "figuring something out."

"I'm afraid if we take history down, no one is putting that together again," she said, referring to if the artifacts had to be separated.

"They would get placed a box in someone's basement, which is sad."

Gary, a former entertainer and producer passed away five years ago, but before that, the Hall of Fame wasn't just a hobby, but an institution that he believed needed to exist.

Some of the artifacts are now owned by the hall of fame, while others are on loan.

Many of the items were acquired off of a handshake, through Gary's endless friendships in the industry.

Deb explains, Gary felt it was important to pay homage to the greats – the people that were essential in building the genre in Canada to what it is today.

While he was alive, the building wasn't just open during the time of the Calgary Stampede – which is when Deb, who has a profession of her own, only has time to keep the doors open.

Gary loved the scenic route of Highway 2, heading back and forth from Didsbury to Calgary, as he marvelled at the Rocky Mountains. The couple moved to Didsbury in 1998, because it was close to Calgary, and where Deb had family.

"I was thinking we could consider other places in the area," she said. "But Gary wanted Didsbury, he loved Didsbury."

Before his passing, Gary was very much the frontman for the hall of fame operation, while Deb offered her support from behind the scenes.

Deb says, while she always supported Gary's endeavour, she didn't truly feel what he felt about the hall until she took on a more prominent role, being there for it as much as she is now.

"It's so vibrant and alive," she said. "I now understand what my husband meant, and the excitement that comes out of this."

Deb recalls her husband being a warm people person, and while being at the Hall of Fame and talking with both hardcore fans of country music and casual passers-by, "he was in his glory."

In addition to being a supporter of the music and its history, Deb gets much of her strength from seeing the reactions of people who frequent the collection.

"It gets people through," she said, thinking about the entries to the hall's guest-book.

"We'd get 'this is wonderful. My uncle's up there,' or 'I'm from B.C. and my aunt did this...' that's what makes it so great."

Another memorable encounter was with a visitor from the United States. Deb remembers the man approaching her with a peculiar question: "is Anne Murray yours?"

Noticing she was puzzled by the wording of his question, he clarifies, "is she Canadian?"

Deb, whose husband worked with Murray on her hit "Snowbird," confirmed that she was.

"Well, that just ticks me off," Deb recalls him saying playfully.

"She's my favourite artist, and now I find out she's Canadian."

What Deb would like to see is, schools taking an interest in opening their students up to the history of the hall.

"This is cultural, and very much apart of our history," she said, adding the importance of all museums.

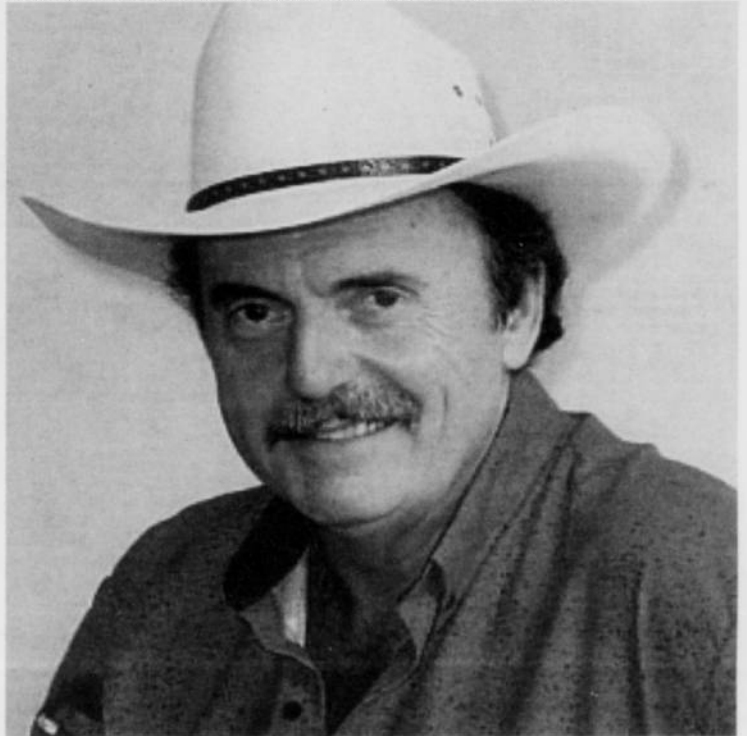

"Instead of opening a book and saying such-and-such happened, take them there and show them around."

Deb continues, "Generations need to know where this all came from, and who started things."

Like Gary, Deb is excited about new artists. Likewise, they are for the hall. During the Stampede, with many country acts scheduled for the stage, they almost always take time to tour what Gary created, where their imagination is captured by the stories and artifacts of artists that inspired them as youths.

What Deb hopes is that those artists can come back to that building in a decade or two and see their faces hanging on the wall, where their successes in Canadian Country can be showcased for visitors from around the globe.

Fall start for Catholic school

BY PAUL FREY
Didsbury Review

Plans for the Holy Trinity Catholic School are well underway with tenders hoped to go out by September.

If everything goes according to plan construction could start on the new school by November, said Ken Jaeger, supervisor of support services with Red Deer Catholic Regional Schools.

Jaeger, who was on hand at the Olds Legion on Thursday for a public meeting on the Richardson's Area Structure Plan, said some form of Catholic education will be available for students by September 2009.

"It may be phased in, it may be a portion of it that's open or we may have to look at some other facility for temporary use for a couple weeks until we can get in but (there will be a school). It is moving very quickly for us," he said.

in the southwest corner of town.

Jaeger said initially Red Deer Catholic Schools plan on starting with 150 students from kindergarten to Grade 5, with upper grades being added as necessary, until the school reaches its target of kindergarten to Grade 5.

KEN JAEGER,
Supervisor of Support Services, Red Deer Catholic Regional Schools

The school will be constructed within the recently annexed quarter section

Drawings are currently about 50 per cent completed for the facility.

At full capacity, Jaeger estimates 300 to 350 students

Thompson shocked at parole

Ottawa- Myron Thompson, Member of Parliament for Wild Rose was shocked to learn that a convicted internet predator who victimized a 14 year old Airdrie girl and a 13 year old Edmonton girl, will be given day parole after serving less than a year of his nine year sentence.

Joshua Innes was charged last August after pleading guilty to two counts of child internet luring, two counts of extortion and one count of distributing child pornography.

The National Parole Board ruled last week that it would release Innes on day parole in August and on full parole a year later, since he qualified for accelerated parole.

"I want to state here and now that I have been fighting against all forms of automatic release such as statutory release and accelerated parole review for years. This case is yet another example of how the Liberal government left us with a correction system which stresses offender rights over offender responsibilities," said Thompson.

"I want everyone to know that this Government is committed to abolishing accelerated parole review, and will be working towards implementing a system of earned parole. All inmates must always earn the right to any early release," concluded Thompson.

GRAHAM

Susan Gay Graham (nee Luft) of Fort McMurray, left us to sing with the angels July 24, 2008 after a brief battle with cancer at the age of 47 years. Susan, the daughter of Margaret Youngs and the late Frederick Luft of Didsbury, will be sadly missed by her loving husband Bruce and her son Jayden of Fort McMurray, along with her devoted sisters, Diana Luft of Elko, B.C.; Deborah (Gerald) Kenney of Millerville; Kathy (Don) McNeil of Didsbury; Laurie (Ron) Wik of Airdrie; Sherri (Randy) Lewis of Balzac; Donna (Dale) Gartner of Ponoka and caring stepfather Neil Youngs. She also leaves behind inspired aunts, uncles, nieces, nephews, grandnieces and nephews and many beloved friends. Susan was predeceased by her father Frederick Luft in 1975 and brother Robert Luft in 1987. Always brave in the face of challenges, Susan was a living example for all who knew her, of the power of faith, hope and courage. Memorial services will be held on Thursday, July 31, 2008 at 11:00 a.m. at the Zion Evangelical Missionary Church, Didsbury, Alberta with Reverend Nancy Nourse officiating. A second Memorial Service will also be held on Saturday, August 9, 2008 at 11:00 a.m. at the Pentecostal Assembly of Fort McMurray, 160 Dickens Drive, Fort McMurray, Alberta. Memorial donations may be made directly to the Tom Baker Cancer Centre, Unit #57. Condolences may be emailed to ofh@telus.net. Heartland Funeral Services Ltd. Olds entrusted with arrangements. 403-507-8610
